Embedded in winter (with an eye on spring), we're all looking for ways to see off the last of the cold and wet. Beyond the heat pump lies the world of warming winter dishes, and in attendance you'll often find a glass of red wine. Roaming the world of Red, there are any number of options to choose from. For us, the No.1 criterion is that it has to taste great, and to that end we pride ourselves on our ability to deliver a winning combination of quality and value, a skill honed over 75+ years of combing the planet for good things to drink. In the following pages you'll find our pick of the current crop from within and beyond our shores, all of them good drinking and great value.

When you're done with that, check out our feature winery – the inimitable Jules Taylor – or the Kiwi sparkling wines, currently hitting a high point in terms of excellence. There's the intriguing tale of Strange Nature Premium Grape Gin, and our piece on the dynamic local distilling industry, on an ever-upward arc and collecting awards all across New Zealand. Or, perhaps, the clever couple brewing up a storm at Southpaw.

So, lots to look at. Spring is coming!

QUINTA DO NOVAL

PORT

A fortified wine produced from terraced vines in the upper reaches of the Douro River in northern Portugal, port is one of the most glorious styles in the world.

Ruby port is the first rung on the ladder, vividly coloured with a fiery nature and undergoing a very short maturation period in port terms. Tawny port is the next level, the term referring to the maturation in wood turning the wine a tawny colour. With aged tawny ports, statements such as 10-year or 20-year on the label indicate the approximate ages when approved.

Using the finest grapes from a single year, vintage ports are bottled after two to three years in wood. Not all years are declared a vintage, with only the best achieving this status. Vintage ports require time in the bottle to mature and express their full character.

LBV ports are late bottled from a single year. With the maturation done prior to bottling, these are similar in style to a vintage port, but bottled ready to enjoy. They are wonderfully complex wines, softer and more approachable than full vintage ports.

White port is a wonderful aperitif; it's also sensational with tonic and ice, as a tasty alternative G&T.

Méthode MARLBOROUGH

Méthode Marlborough is a grower-led society that has established a gold-plated standard for the Marlborough sparkling wine industry, adhering to a set of criteria that meet the required quality level. The fruit must fall within the designated varieties of Pinot Noir, Chardonnay and Pinot Meunier, and been sourced from the Marlborough region; the second fermentation is required to have been done in the bottle, with the wine riddled and disgorged. The minimum time on lees before disgorging is 18 months, as it is only after this point that the autolysis characters from time with the lees are developed. If it's a top-quality New Zealand sparkling wine you're searching for, this is where you'll find it.

RIVERLAND

THE MAKING OF Strange Nature

Marlborough's Giesen winery recently invested some (very) big bucks in spinning cone technology to gently remove the alcohol from some of its most popular wines, successfully preserving their intrinsic aromas and flavours. Giesen's alcohol-free range is so popular that the new machine is now operating 24/7 to keep up with demand. This, of course, left the pure and pristine New Zealand alcohol from their Sauvignon Blanc hanging about, and being disciples of general efficiency and non-wastfulness, the Giesen team decided to use it to craft a premium grape gin. Why wouldn't you? After 18 months of trialling a range of botanicals, the budding distillers realised that with the quality of the Sauvignon Blanc aromas and flavours captured in the spirit, all they really needed was the headline act of gin botanicals, juniper. The result is a gin with a unique provenance drawn from Giesen's intimate understanding of their terroir. 'We started off pursuing one thing and discovered entirely another.' Indeed. Pure genius.

An intriguing symbiosis between wine and spirit is captured in this happy convergence of two different agendas at Giesen

The Kiwi Spirit

THE EVOLUTION OF DISTILLING COOL

An international demand for Aotearoa's distilled spirits has grown steadily over the last decade. Whether it's created by fermenting grains or by fermenting fruits, we're loving it. A new generation of local distillers is galvanising an invigorated spirit industry with a growing catalogue of exciting and innovative beverages, imbuing their offerings with a uniquely Kiwi character via the native flora, natural surroundings, and a good dose of do-it-yourself attitude. Distilleries have been popping up all over the country, with many happy to facilitate tours, so get amongst it and take a look into what our backyard has to offer. This is a movement to support and celebrate. | AJ

GINATO

Birthplace of the Renaissance, ballet, Michelangelo and all manner of delicious pasta, Italy has given much to the world. Even in this surfeit of gifts, the invention of gin stands tall, though perhaps the Italians don't get the credit for it that they should.

Ginato continues these Latin traditions of excellence, combining some of the finest produce from around the peninsula in what they call a trinity of provenance. Indigenous grapes Nebbiolo, Barbera and Sangiovese are used, along with locally produced Pinot Grigio, juniper grown beneath Tuscan skies and some of the best citrus fruits Sicily has to offer. Southpaw

Wine and sports. It happens sometimes, but it's not the image typically evoked when anticipating an evening at the stadium. Or the lounge. Or the barbeque, with a radio. It's beer. We drink beer at the pub, watching the Warriors come so close again. At the stadium, quickly, to avoid warming the plastic bottles. Around the grilling of grey sausages, halting conversation at the appropriate 'wicket'.

Cam and Penny of Southpaw Brewing are keenly aware of the romance between beer and sports. Southpaw brewing is branded in homage to the pairing, but with a twist. Both Cam and Penny are left-handed. Each cunningly named can of Southpaw is a reference to a left-handed sports technique or hero, itself a metaphor for something unexpected, which is what you'll experience in a Southpaw can.

Talented underdogs of the beer industry, Southpaw's Head Brewer Cam has an impressive resume, winning numerous awards for other breweries. Southpaw is his opportunity to shine under his own banner, and he already has his own spread of awards to prove it. | PC
