When you live in one of the most beautiful parts of Australia, which also happens to be one of its most celebrated winemaking districts, it must be tempting to put your feet up and do things the easy way. For vigneron Melissa and Mike Brown, owners of McLaren Vale’s Gemtree Wines, any such temptation seems to have been wholly avoided. Instead they have taken the stance that they are blessed to live and make wine where they do, and have shouldered the weighty responsibility for the custodianship of their land.

Melissa’s parents planted their vines in McLaren Vale in 1980. Some fourteen years later Melissa, fresh faced from travel and studies, asked to work in the vineyard. She has been there ever since, learning the ropes of viticulture, organics and biodynamics, with her husband Mike taking care of the winemaking and business sides of the venture.

MAVERICK

These biodynamic champions do low yield, high quality

AUSTRALIA

Established in 2004 by Ron Brown, Maverick is a relative newcomer in Australian terms, though the vineyards themselves are anything but young, with half the vines over a hundred years old. Brown's goal has been to position Maverick as one of the top premium boutique wineries in Australia. The wines are hand-crafted from 100% biodynamically farmed vineyards, with Maverick's Vine Vale winery certified biodynamic. They may prompt you to review any preconceptions you might be harbouring about the nature of Australian wine. Elegant and restrained, beautifully executed, as they break the mould, they won't disappoint.

What makes Coonawarra so special?

It is the famed terra rossa, or red earth, in combination with a cool (by Australian standards) maritime climate that provide much of what has made Coonawarra internationally recognised for the quality of its wines.

THE HIDDEN SEA

AUSTRALIA

The winemakers at The Hidden Sea are on a mission to help remove plastic from our oceans

Born both from the sea and also in response to human degradation of it, comes The Hidden Sea Wines. Co-founders Richie Vandenberg and Justin Moran have combined their love of the ocean, South Australia's ability to produce excellent wines and a commitment to 'living with purpose,' to create a brand that is helping to clean up our seas as a core part of its raison d'être.

To do this they have partnered with the ReSea Project to remove and recycle the equivalent of ten plastic bottles from the ocean for every bottle of wine they sell. The Hidden Sea have set themselves the goal of removing a billion bottles worth of plastic by 2030, the equivalent of nearly 17,000 tons of waste. As Richie puts it, 'the idea of living with purpose is to set an ambitious goal that is worth fighting for and galvanising a tribe of like-minded people to help you achieve it.'

There's an estimated 5.25 trillion pieces of plastic currently in the oceans. Which is a mind boggling number, but if you want another one, then approximately 269,000 tons of that mass are currently floating on the ocean's surface. If you want a visual idea of what that might look like, as well as a piece of nightmare fuel, try a Google image search for 'the great pacific garbage patch.'

CHILE

EMILIANA

'We can't be regenerative if we don't start by being organic.'

Emiliana are the gold standard for biodynamic and organic winemaking in Chile. Indeed, with their all-encompassing ecological and social strategies around terroir and their workers, they are an example to the world of how things can be done. Located in Chile's Casablanca Valley, this singular winery has enthusiastically embraced the organic and biodynamic way of winemaking. They employ a comprehensive interlocking system that involves the creation of balanced vineyard ecosystems, within which a host of animals, insects and plants play a part in the maintenance of vineyard balance, acting as natural pesticides, weed killers and compost producers.

TAITTINGER

Champagne supremos Taittinger are coming to town in their role as official champagne of the FIFA Women's World Cup

The ever stylish Taittinger began life in 1734 as Champagne Fourneaux. The Fourneaux family were themselves no slouches, acting for a time as advisors to Veuve Clicquot.

During World War I, cavalry officer Pierre Taittinger spent time near Epernay. He subsequently returned to the region in 1932 to buy the Fourneaux holdings and found the House of Taittinger, in the process buying up large swathes of valuable vineyard at a time when Depression-ravaged land prices were at rock-bottom.

Relinquishing control to international corporate interests in the mid-2000s, the family subsequently managed to claw their way back into contention. Today, once again in French hands and headed up by Pierre-Emmanuel Taittinger, son Clovis and daughter Vitalie, the proudly family-focused business is quartered in Reims, where they reside above their labyrinthine 4th-Century Roman cellars and remain one of the largest vineyard owners in the region.

Since taking up the reins of export management in 2007, Clovis Taittinger has focused on developing international sales, driven by his dedication to the family's champagne house. He constantly searches out new partnerships around the world, and it is thanks to his efforts that, from 2014 onwards, Taittinger became the official champagne of the FIFA World Cup.

2023 sees this arrangement continue, with the Taittinger brand stepping up to support the FIFA Women's World Cup to be held in Australia and New Zealand from July 20th.

TAITTINGER | CLOVIS TAITTINGER

Artistic, Marketing and Communications Director Vitalie Taittinger, who plays a direct role in representing Taittinger in France and abroad, will be making her way to our shores during the World Cup.

Which means we're going to be doing a tasting at Glengarry of the essential Taittinger range, with the Taittinger family in the house to run us through the wines. Champagne zealots that we are, we think that's pretty exciting.

And if you're all about the football and supporting our committed women's team, check out the opportunity we're extending to win yourself some tickets to the event itself.

MOUTARD

Champagne's best-kept secret

While Moutard may lack the fame of some of the other marques, their wines offer exceptional value. The Moutard-Diligent family can trace their viticultural history as far back as 1642, but it wasn't until the 1920s that they began producing champagne under their own name. Today, the estate consists of 22.5 hectares in the Côte des Bar region of southern Champagne.

Moutard produce a full range of champagnes, including the unique Cuvée des 6 Cépages, made from six different varieties, the only one of its kind. The non-vintage wines are all aged for at least three years, the vintage and prestige champagnes for ten to fifteen.

Both Moutard's rosé and Grande Cuvée non-vintage bottlings are produced from 100% Pinot Noir, with additional complexity achieved through the use of older reserve stocks. The Grande Cuvée is a standout wine, its seductive bouquet of peaches and pears underpinned by touches of almond and brioche.

Wonderfully fresh, with creamy textures and an elegant sign-off, it's an ideal aperitif, but has the weight for food as well. Soaked on its skins, the rosé is a benchmark of the genre, the nose complex, the rich and creamy flavours of strawberry and blackcurrant overlaid with a superb smoky, textural quality.

BORDEAUX 2022

So, what's the 2022 vintage like? High quality wines crafted from extremes
The resulting low quantities make our EN PRIMEUR offers essential reading

What is en primeur? | Also known also as Wine Futures, it is best described as 'getting in first'. En primeur is an opportunity to secure a large range of wines from Bordeaux while they are still in barrel. By doing this you pay significantly less than if you wait to see these wines on retail shelves. You also get access to many wines that never make it as far as the retail shelves.

How does it work? | Wine experts initially evaluate the vintage in Bordeaux itself, through a series of tastings where the wines are prepared from barrel samples to represent the final wines. Glengarry GM Liz Wheadon attended this year's tasting. The wines are then offered en primeur through Bordeaux's open market system, 'La Place'. The releases should be throughout May and into June, with exact timing variable and dependent upon each château.

Glengarry has longstanding relationships with the best negociants in France, and we have been offering en primeur to our key customers since the 1982 vintage.

How long do I wait? | Payments are made in two instalments. The first is later this year, while the second and final instalment is due on or before collection of the wines, which should be towards the middle of 2024.

What are the benefits? | Some of these wines are only available en primeur and will never reach the open market. With supply and demand in play, retail prices are almost always well above what you pay when buying en primeur. And, you're getting some of the best wines in the world! Simple economic sense, really. BURGUNDY

Warm vintages are not a rarity these days. With experience under their belts, the Burgundian producers read the 2020 weather patterns and crafted wines whose freshness confronts the warmth of the year. The heat has delivered a level of ripeness that has allowed the Bourgogne and Village-level wines in particular to be delicious immediately upon release.

Destined for the cellar, the top-end wines are powerful and concentrated. This is also a year where you'll find an incredible amount of consistency. All in all, an excellent vintage from Burgundy. While proud of the quantities we have secured, interest is high, and we will likely be faced with allocating these wines.

Majestic MADEIRA

From the signing of America's Declaration of Independence in 1776 to the presidential oath-taking ceremonies of George Washington and Barack Obama, majestic Madeira has made its presence felt

FINE WINE

Madeira is a fortified sweet wine made from a number of varieties. The four main qualitative grapes, from driest to sweetest, are Verdelho, Sercial, Boal and Malvasia. The mainstay, producing the majority of the volume, is Tinta Negra. When the desired sweetness level is reached, alcoholic fermentation is stopped via the addition of a neutral grape spirit.

At this point, the wine is either selected for natural or artificial heating, with the natural process producing the finest quality, where the wines are put into casks and left in the rafters of the Madeira lodges for maturation. Used for entry-level Madeira, the artificial process involves sealing the wines in stainless steel vats, where it imparts a caramelised character.

The volcanic, subtropical extremes on the island of Madeira, the varieties planted and the time of harvest collectively produce grapes with high acidity, a characteristic of the Madeira wines largely veiled by the sugar. Fortified, the wines will be around 19-20% abv.

The sweetness levels range across styles and varieties, as do the characters, from the salty tang of Sercial to the rich, nutty character of Malvasia. Madeira makes a wonderful aperitif, the drier styles chilled to around 12°C. Sweeter styles can be served cooler and are a perfect way to finish any meal; they match very well with desserts. The versatility of Madeira makes it an amazing addition to a degustation menu. Time to get experimenting.

JUSTINO'S

One of just eight companies producing Madeira on the island itself, Justino's are also one of its oldest, and the biggest, boasting a history dating back to 1870 and a large cache of high quality Madeira wines that are aged in oak casks.

Current oenologist and head of the company, Juan Teixeira, is dynamic and forward thinking. Never losing sight of the rich history of Madeira and its fortified wines, Juan loves to innovate, whether it's embracing organic viticulture (something new for the island) or maturing his wines in a variety of barrels from around the world.

The quality of Justino's Madeiras are something to behold. Viticulture on the island is practiced by around 1600 growers, with Justino's sourcing their grapes from around 800 of them.

CALLINGTON MILL

Tasmania's burgeoning whisky scene harnesses a rich industrial heritage

SPIRIT OF OZ

The beautiful Callington Mill is a living testament to Tasmania's industrial past and the only fully operational Lincolnshire tower mill in the southern hemisphere. Built in 1837 by local businessman and agriculturist John Vincent, the Mill was initially designed to grind flour and other grains for the growing community. A painstaking restoration project began in 2005, which saw every inch of the historic structure returned to its former glory.

The Callington Mill Distillery was established in 2017 by the Ibrahim and Nicolas families, passionate whisky enthusiasts who sought to create a unique Tasmanian whisky experience. Channelling the region's innovative spirit, Carrington Mill is home to a shining new 100% Tasmanian-made turnkey distillery. They went on to win distiller of the year three times at the same competition. Since then, of course, Japanese whisky has become much more of a 'thing,' heavily sought after to the point of being frustratingly difficult or impossible to find.

What is perhaps less well understood by western aficionados, however, is that Suntory had a very long history of excellence prior to (and since) their success in 2003. Indeed, this year Suntory celebrate a century since they opened their Yamazaki Distillery on the outskirts of Kyoto, the first whisky distillery founded on Japanese shores.

TRINITY HILL LOST GARDEN

Hawke's Bay icons Trinity Hill's latest offering is a delicious, zesty rosé. Watermelon, rose-hip and berries are all on full display, but what you will not find in this wine is alcohol.

The talented Trinity team identified certain parcels of their vineyards that ripen earlier, offering full flavour at lower sugar levels. This special juice is then vinified into a wine in a traditional manner, before rather more high tech and modern practices take over to remove any alcoholic content.

TERPS & CO

Not drinking alcohol doesn't have to mean feeling like you're missing out, as Napier based heroes Terps & Co are on a mission to prove. Plant based and vegan friendly, their range is also very low in sugar - less than 1g of it per 100mLs of liquid. Delicious, and safe to down at a mate's mid-week barbeque, that's the terpene taste of 'guilt-free' you're getting.

Sustainable SAWMILL

One of New Zealand's premier craft couples lead the way in sustainable business initiatives

BREWING

Certified

Corporation

Mike Sutherland and Kirsty McKay took a chance on buying a local business and took over running the Sawmill Brewery, originally located next to the Leigh Sawmill Café. That chance bore tasty, malty, hoppy, successful fruit, and Sawmill have become a brewing darling.

In the craft beer industry it can sometimes be a little trite to say that someone is a maverick or doing something differently; that's sort of implied in the word 'craft' after all. But in a town more well known for its wineries and Sunday markets, Kirsty and Mike were far from the craft brewing epicentres of the time.

That insulation and passion for originality and doing things properly drove much of what has made their beers so beloved, but also led to Sawmill becoming our first B Corp Certified brewery.

The path to B Corp is a demanding one, and to meet it Sawmill have undertaken many initiatives, both to minimise their harm to the environment and maximise contribution to their community.

Carbon recapture systems, low rates of waste to landfill (averaging less than 11kg per week), a heavy focus on water efficiency and utilising NZ grown and made products wherever possible are just some of these initiatives that are part of everyday business practice at Sawmill.

Craft beer in cans is normal these days, but Sawmill were the first to do it locally. Only time will tell if their drive to be a force for good will catch on as much. While we wait and see on that, there's a beer or two with their name on it that we think you'd love.

B Corp Certification was kicked off in 2006 by a group of forward thinkers who believe that a new way of doing things for businesses was not just desirable, but necessary. They took the stance that a business or organisation should take into account what is good for all stakeholders, not just shareholders. Stakeholders that include their employees, their customers, suppliers and the environment itself.

The Mighty PUHOI BEER

The vibrancy of Puhoi is captured in this proudly eponymous beer

BREWING

Even today, there remains a lingering presence of the original Bohemian settlers in Puhoi's general store, along the Puhoi river and at the Puhoi Pub. This is a place where nothing is rushed and things are done well, with an appropriate amount of honest effort and a healthy helping of humour. The important stuff. The name Puhoi means slow or unhurried water, which pretty much sums things up.

The Puhoi locals behind this beer thought to themselves, 'Puhoi is a pretty good village really and deserves a pretty good beer.' So they made one. While you could drive languidly north and enjoy a pint in Puhoi itself (a fabulous idea, you really should do it some time), you can now find it here in our Glengarry stores.

Inspired by the original Bohemian settlers of Puhoi, Puhoi Beer is an award-winning version of the classic Czech pilsner, a crisp, refreshing tittle with a generous character that celebrates the original old school Bohemian ethos of hard work, pioneering spirit, love of community and a hankering for fun.

But let's hear from the Puhoi people themselves: 'Whether our hard-earned thirsts might be on the footy field, helping a mate build a deck, or pulling in a few big, fat snapper, we raise a glass to those who gave us our beautiful village and even more beautiful beer by stopping and savouring all that's good in the world.'

Amen to that.

PUHOI THE PLACE

Puhoi is the stuff of legend, evoking images of colourful and resilient Bohemian types living life at the edge. Which is pretty much how it was. And possibly still is. The Puhoi Pub has been famous for generations. Situated 40km north of Auckland, the settlement was founded in 1863 by Bohemian Captain Mark Krippner, and attracted immigrants from Bohemia in search of land to farm. Canoeing up the Puhoi River expecting farmland, they got wilderness instead, and for survival had to resort to trading firewood and breeding bullocks to shift logs. Two nikau whare were built to house the first settlers. Things have moved on a bit since then, with the rolling farmland now happily in place. Puhoi continues to retain much of its Bohemian charm, while we continue to enjoy its magic.
